Everyone has the right to request that a digital website, mobile application or some element thereof be made accessible. It is also possible to request that the information be made available by means of an alternative means of access, for example by reading out a digitally inaccessible document, describing the content of a film without an audio description, etc. The request should include the details of the person making the request, an indication of which website or mobile application is being requested and the means of contact. If the person making the request wishes to receive the information by means of an alternative means of access, they should also specify how the information can be presented in a way that is convenient for them. The public body should comply with the request without delay and no later than 7 days from the date of the request. If it is not possible to comply with this time limit, the public body shall inform the requester without delay when it will be possible to comply with the request, but this time limit shall not be longer than 2 months from the date of the request. If digital accessibility is not possible, the public body may propose an alternative means of accessing the information. Where a public body refuses to comply with a request to provide accessibility or an alternative means of accessing the information, the requester may lodge a complaint about the provision of digital accessibility of the website, mobile application or an element of the website or mobile application. After exhausting the procedure indicated above, an application may also be made to the Ombudsman.
